

1. Introduction

This guidance note is a basic introduction to what dividends are, how they are paid and the paperwork involved in making a dividend payment.

This guidance note focuses on the payment of dividends in specie at the discretion of the company, known as a “dividend in kind”. This is where a company may be needed.

Dividends declared by public companies in respect of preference shares are beyond the scope of this guidance note. However, many businesses in fact opt for dividends as they are advantageous available by public companies. The scope of this guidance note is limited and tax advice is sought as appropriate.

Tax credit changes from 6th April 2017 to a tax allowance from 6th April 2023. Dividend vouchers are discussed below. Further information required for the payment of dividends can be found on the HMRC website, www.hmrc.gov.uk

2. What are dividends?

A dividend is a distribution of a company's profits. A company has made a profit. In broad terms this profit is the company's income less its expenses and liabilities, in other words its net profit. Before a dividend, it must have sufficient funds. The law regarding distributions is governed by Part 23 of the Companies Act 2006.

Dividends can either be final or interim.

Final Dividends

A final dividend is paid on the company's profits after its annual accounts have been drawn up so that the company's financial performance is clear. Therefore what, if any, dividend is paid and declared is set out in the company's annual accounts. The Companies Act 2006 does not specify who must declare a dividend, but it must be declared by shareholders.

However, unless a private company's articles of association set out the process for recommending a dividend, the company must follow generally accepted practice.

what they are, how they are paid and the paperwork involved in making a dividend payment.

are by SME private companies in the UK. This guidance note includes a short paragraph introducing the concept of dividends for those considering this type of payment and specific legal (and tax) advice is sought as appropriate.

and rate dividends as they relate to the company's profits. This note. In addition whilst many companies do not structure specifically for the tax advantages available by public companies, this is also beyond the scope of this guidance note. It is recommended that specialist accounting and tax advice is sought as appropriate.

sequent adjustment to the dividend allowance (from 6th April 2023) and dividend vouchers are discussed below. Further information can be found on the HMRC website, www.hmrc.gov.uk profits made to its shareholders. If a company has made a profit, it can distribute these funds to its shareholders. In broad terms this profit is the company's income less its expenses and liabilities, in other words its net profit. Before a company can legally pay a dividend, it must have sufficient funds. The law regarding distributions is governed by Part 23 of the Companies Act 2006.

After a company's annual accounts have been drawn up so that the company's financial performance is clear. Therefore what, if any, dividend is paid and declared is set out in the company's annual accounts. The Companies Act 2006 does not specify who must declare a dividend, but it must be declared by shareholders.

However, unless a private company's articles of association set out a procedure in its articles as to the process for recommending a dividend or is silent on the point, it is recommended that specialist accounting and tax advice is sought as appropriate.

dividends, the dividend should be paid by way of written resolution. For companies with private company model articles of association:

(1) "The company may by ordinary resolution decide to pay interim dividends."

(2) A dividend must not be paid unless recommended as to amount by the directors.

For companies where model articles provide themselves a final dividend, they cannot vote to pay a dividend in excess of the amount recommended but can decide to pay a lower amount.

However, note that some companies will choose to dispense with the need for a dividend resolution.

A final dividend is a debt payable to shareholders once approved.

Interim Dividends

Interim dividends can be paid at any time during the company's annual accounting period. The amount is determined by the directors (recommended by the shareholders) and is usually decided solely by the board. Dividends are usually distributed either quarterly or after six months. There are no rules as to how often dividends are distributed, but quarterly or every six months is common. A dividend only becomes a debt once it has been recommended by the board. The board has the ability to rescind its dividend resolution up to the time of actual payment of the dividend.

3. Declaring and paying dividends

As stated above, any proposal to pay a dividend will involve checking the company's articles of association to see if they allow for interim dividends and whether they are modified private company model articles with article 30 in place.

Articles may contain restrictions on the payment of dividends or contain a particular mechanism for the payment of dividends.

The model articles provide that dividends are to be paid to shareholders in proportion to the number of shares held. Therefore if a shareholder holds 50% of the shares, he/she will receive 50% of each dividend.

When recommending or declaring a dividend, directors must have regard to their duties under the Companies Act 2006. In particular they must have regard to s.172 (duty to promote the success of the company) and s.174 (duty to exercise reasonable care, skill and diligence). Directors should also be aware of the Insolvency Act 1986 (s.238) which makes directors liable under s.238 of the Insolvency Act 1986 if the company was insolvent or the company was becoming insolvent at the time of the payment of the dividend.

holders at a general meeting or by written resolution. For companies with private company model articles of association: (1) and (2) state:

(1) "The company may by ordinary resolution decide to pay interim dividends, and the directors may decide to pay such dividends."

(2) A dividend must not be paid unless recommended as to amount by the directors. The dividend must not exceed the amount recommended by the directors.

For companies where model articles provide themselves a final dividend, they cannot vote to pay a dividend in excess of the amount recommended but can decide to pay a lower amount.

However, note that some companies will choose to amend their articles to dispense with the need for a dividend resolution.

A final dividend is a debt payable to shareholders once approved.

Interim dividends can be paid at any time during the year and are calculated before the company's annual accounting period. The amount is determined by the directors (recommended by the shareholders) and is usually decided solely by the board. Dividends are usually distributed either quarterly or after six months. There are no rules as to how often dividends are distributed, but quarterly or every six months is common. A dividend only becomes a debt once it has been recommended by the board. The board has the ability to rescind its dividend resolution up to the time of actual payment of the dividend.

As stated above, any proposal to pay a dividend will involve checking the company's articles of association to see if they allow for interim dividends and whether they are modified private company model articles with article 30 in place.

Articles may contain restrictions on the payment of dividends or contain a particular mechanism for the payment of dividends.

The model articles provide that dividends are to be paid to shareholders in proportion to the number of shares held. Therefore if a shareholder holds 50% of the shares, he/she will receive 50% of each dividend.

When recommending or declaring a dividend, directors must have regard to their duties under the Companies Act 2006. In particular they must have regard to s.172 (duty to promote the success of the company) and s.174 (duty to exercise reasonable care, skill and diligence). Directors should also be aware of the Insolvency Act 1986 (s.238) which makes directors liable under s.238 of the Insolvency Act 1986 if the company was insolvent or the company was becoming insolvent at the time of the payment of the dividend.

4. Board Meeting and Shareholder Resolution

What type of board meeting type of dividend is being company enable the direct the declaration to be made

You will find we have recommendation and declaration relating to dividends. The first is recommending and declaring the dividend and the payment of a dividend, to the shareholders for the meeting) and declaration. The second is recommending the company's articles. For each of these, a shareholders' ordinary resolution must be done by way of written resolution, which is required to pass the necessary majority at a general meeting.

Board minutes must be kept as they are required by HMR and declared.

5. Dividend vouchers

Each shareholder must be provided with a dividend voucher. A dividend voucher is a written record of the dividend payment and what shares the dividend is paid on. It is a record of the dividend payment and what shares the dividend is paid on. Some companies do not issue dividend vouchers if the dividend is paid by direct credit. The template dividend voucher is provided for companies that issue dividends.

The rationale behind a dividend is that shareholders receive dividends they receive from the company's profits. The process.

Prior to 6th April 2016, as which they had already paid a voucher to be credited against the company had paid and was tax that was due on their d

The dividend the shareholder receives is $100. The remaining 10% of the dividend is paid in the form of a tax credit. In other words, the tax credit represents 10% of the dividend. The tax credit is $10. The total dividend is $110.

A company wants to pay a tax credit of £100. Pay £90 a total of £1,000 on the div

From 6th April 2016, the d
tax-free dividend allowan ivate company will depend on what

l) and whether the articles of the and declare the dividend or require board meeting minutes for the the Simply-Docs folder of documents is the directors both recommending involves the directors recommending ment to allow the dividend to be put written resolution or in a general depend on a review of the relevant orders must declare a final dividend, to be passed. This will usually be templates also includes the wording whether by written resolution or in as general records and also in case identend was properly recommended her by the company. A dividend ed the dividend, how much it was ke a formal receipt and provides a er will be sent to a bank or building ilding society account. You will find folder of documents relating to Shareholders must pay tax on any tax year via the self-assessment holders dividends out of profits on tax credit recorded in the dividend tax credit took account of the tax the holder to offset against any income ed 90% of their 'dividend income'.

ade up of a tax credit. Put another d income. A simple example would add the £100 tax credit and record polished and replaced by a £5,000 individuals from this date did not have to pay tax on the first £5,000 of dividend income they have as the dividend income from income tax.

From 6th April 2018, whilst the dividend allowance remained in place, changes made in the Spring Budget 2018 reduced the dividend tax free allowance to £2,000 rather than £5,000 from 31/3/19.

Note that from 6th April 2024 the dividend allowance has been reduced from £2,000 to £1,000 and the dividend tax free allowance further to £500 from 6th April 2024.

Dividend income more than £1,000 (applicable from 6th April 2024) is taxed at the following rates

- 8.75% on dividend income in the basic rate band;
- 33.75% on dividend income in the higher rate band; and
- 39.35% on dividend income in the additional rate band.
- Before 6th April 2024 the rates were 7.5%, 32.5% and 38.1% respectively.

There is much more detailed guidance on HMRC's website as well as worked examples of how the dividend allowance works.

Taxable dividend income includes dividends received from ISAs, which continue to be subject to the dividend allowance.

Note however that the zero rate band can reduce a taxpayer's total taxable income and the dividend allowance is not available for dividends.

The dividend voucher will usually be a paper voucher (i.e., one attached to an annual return package) is as acceptable as an electronic voucher provided the shareholders have previously agreed to this.

The voucher should state:

- Company name;
- Name and address of shareholder;
- Total shareholding;
- Amount of dividend;
- Date of the payment;
- Company signature.

This paperwork must be produced to HMRC as evidence that it was a dividend and that the dividend was properly declared.

6. Waiver

A shareholder is entitled to waive a dividend. Although not that common, small business owners can waive dividends in order to retain money in the business.

Only a shareholder can waive a dividend and a company cannot waive a dividend on behalf of a shareholder.

a dividend payment. If there are different shareholders, it may be necessary to have different dividend rights. See our guidance note on share classification.

A waiver may cover a single dividend period. The waiver should state that there is a genuine commercial purpose for a specific purpose. This means that the waiver is not considered as income. As stated above, this guidance note, however, does not provide specialist tax advice on section 836A (Trading & Other Income).

A waiver must be a formal document sent to the company. The right to the dividend arises when the dividend has been paid and a final dividend declaration has been made.

You will find a template declaration of dividends in the Simply-Docs folder of documents relating to dividends.

7. Dividends in Specie

An alternative to a distribution of cash to shareholders. This transfer usually involves the transfer of a non-cash asset, such as property, an investment or equipment. A company may wish to transfer assets to its shareholders instead of, or, as well as a cash asset. Dividends in specie are often used in conjunction with an intra-group reorganisation. A company may wish to satisfy its obligations which it will then satisfy by distributing assets of equivalent value to its shareholders.

A company must ensure that it has the authority to pay a dividend in specie and in the absence of an express power in the company's articles, Article 34 of the model articles allows non-cash dividends to be paid subject to shareholder approval. As with cash dividends, paying a dividend in specie is subject to the provisions of Part 23 of the Companies Act 2006, concerning directors' duties. The most important common law rule is that a company must be solvent following the distribution. Directors must also consider the immediate cash flow implications of the distribution and the effect on the company's ability to pay its debts as they fall due. Additional thought needs to be given to ensure that a company does not become insolvent as a result of the distribution. Directors have obligations relating to the distribution and may need to enter into a separate agreement with the shareholders to ensure that those liabilities are effectively transferred. Specific advice should be sought in relation to this.

There may also be tax issues relating to the distribution of assets.

The main question in relation to the transfer of the property? The question is whether the consideration is for money or for money's worth.

may pay different dividend amounts to different classes of shares with different dividend rights. See our guidance note on share classification.

If a dividend is being waived and that the company is retaining funds for a specific purpose, it may be necessary to demonstrate to HMRC that the waiver is not considered as income or diverting otherwise taxable dividends are beyond the scope of the guidance. It may be sensible to seek specialist tax advice in order not to fall foul of the Income Tax (Trading & Other Income) Act 2005.

A waiver must be signed, dated, witnessed and received by the company before the dividend must be waived before it has been paid and a final dividend declaration has been made.

You will find a template declaration of dividends in the Simply-Docs folder of documents relating to dividends.

A dividend in specie is a dividend of a particular asset (or assets) of a particular kind or a "dividend in specie". It may be property, an investment or equipment. A company may wish to transfer assets to its shareholders instead of, or, as well as a cash asset. Dividends in specie are often used in conjunction with an intra-group reorganisation. A company may wish to satisfy its obligations which it will then satisfy by distributing assets of equivalent value to its shareholders.

A company must ensure that it has the authority to pay a dividend in specie and in the absence of an express power in the company's articles, Article 34 of the model articles allows non-cash dividends to be paid subject to shareholder approval. As with cash dividends, paying a dividend in specie is subject to the provisions of Part 23 of the Companies Act 2006, concerning directors' duties. The most important common law rule is that a company must be solvent following the distribution. Directors must also consider the immediate cash flow implications of the distribution and the effect on the company's ability to pay its debts as they fall due. Additional thought needs to be given to ensure that a company does not become insolvent as a result of the distribution. Directors have obligations relating to the distribution and may need to enter into a separate agreement with the shareholders to ensure that those liabilities are effectively transferred. Specific advice should be sought in relation to this.

The main question in relation to the transfer of the property? The question is whether SDLT is payable on the transfer of the property? The question is whether there is chargeable consideration. The question is whether the consideration is for money or for money's worth. For example where a dividend in a cash amount is declared and a debt has been created and HMRC will not charge SDLT. Transfers of assets between companies are unlikely to attract SDLT as section 42 of the Finance Act 1999 provides that transfers between associated companies. A company should seek advice from HMRC or a specialist tax adviser.

A dividend in specie may be made if the company is disposing of an asset. It is important that specialist tax advice is sought in relation to this.

You will find a template for a resolution relating to the declaration of a dividend in the Simply-Docs folder. You will also find board minutes for the declaration of a dividend to be satisfied by transferring an asset. If a debt is satisfied in specie, a debt may have to be created and SDLT to be paid on the transfer. Transfers of assets between companies are unlikely to attract SDLT as section 42 of the Finance Act 1999 provides that transfers between associated companies. A company should seek advice from HMRC or a specialist tax adviser.

A dividend in specie may be made if the company is disposing of an asset. It is important that specialist tax advice is sought in relation to this.

You will find a template for a resolution relating to the declaration of a dividend in the Simply-Docs folder. You will also find board minutes for the declaration of a dividend to be satisfied by transferring

S

A

M

P

L

E